Most job hunts look like this.

01

You send the same resume everywhere.

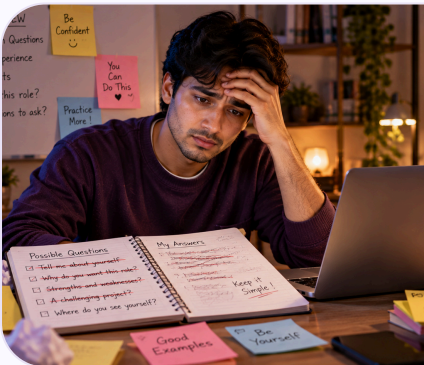

A generic resume rarely matches the job description, so it gets passed over before a person reads it.

02

You hear back from almost no one.

With no feedback you cannot tell what is going wrong, so you keep sending more of the same.

03

You prepare alone and guess what they will ask.

Practising alone, nobody asks the follow-up questions or tells you which answers fall flat.

Job Hunter turns guessing into a plan.

Five tools that work together.

01

Every matching job, in one search

Search LinkedIn, Indeed and Dice at once. Each role comes back ranked by how well it fits your resume, with the recruiter contact when it is public.

02

Know your resume score before you apply

See how an applicant tracking system reads your resume for a specific job: your match score, the skills you are missing, and what to fix first.

03

An application email written for that job

Job Hunter drafts a short, specific email for the role and the recruiter, ready to copy, edit and send in a minute.

04

Rehearse out loud with an AI interviewer

A live voice interview tuned to your level, your resume and the job. Pick a round, answer naturally, and get follow-up questions like the real thing.

05

A scorecard that tells you what to fix

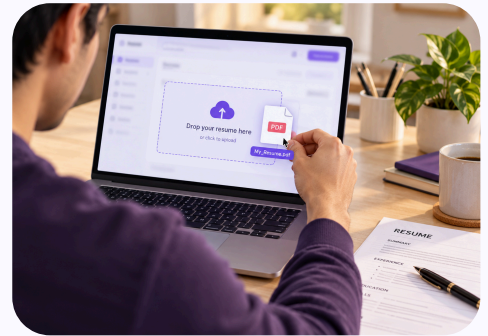

After each session you get an overall readiness score, clarity and confidence scores, strengths, gaps and the topics to practice next.

From resume to offer in three steps.

1

Upload your resume

Add one or more versions. Job Hunter reads your skills, experience and level.

2

Find and tailor

Search three job boards at once, check your match score and send a tailored application email.

3

Practice and get hired

Rehearse the exact round with an AI interviewer, review your scorecard and walk in ready.

Rehearse the real interview, out loud.

Choose a round and a mode. The AI interviewer speaks with you in real time, follows up on your answers and scores you when you finish.
